I have done this, and I bet you have too: You work hard to hang a heavy picture or mirror on the wall using several heavy-duty picture hooks. The picture is tough to align in just the right position because of its size and weight, complicated by the hanging wire and multiple hooks.

Then, during the night, you hear a crash. You jump out of bed to discover that the mirror has fallen. The floor has a big gouge, the frame is broken, and you’ve got lots of broken glass to pick up.

You can prevent this problem with a unique picture-and-mirror-hanging bracket available at larger frame shops. This metal device comes in two parts. One bracket is attached across the back of the picture frame with a few screws. A matching bracket is screwed to the wall with long screws that reach the studs. Because the wall bracket is wider than 16 inches, it can easily be screwed into several wall studs.

Then you just hang the mirror by slipping the frame bracket over the wall bracket. It’s easy to level the frame and place it in the right location with just a few measurements when you first attach the bracket to the wall.

The origin of KritterCaps® - products for pest control

In 2001 I retired from a family business of 40 years and I started Stouffer Technologies,

And now you can get involved with The ASHI School with the additional TAS+ program. Get in front of students while they are starting their Inc. Since I had designed and patented several ideas for the family business I decided to help entrepreneurs develop and patent their ideas.

couple of friends had given me a prototype of the original 3" corner insert that they thought would help solve the mice problem in their attics. I thought that was a very good idea and I helped them finish a prototype and apply for the patent. After which they wanted me to build the molds and take charge of the product and in return they would get a royalty for product sold.

I had a design company help me design my logo and product identification. I sent several hundred brochures and samples to home builders, building supply stores and the vinyl siding manufacturers in the US and Canada; none of which were interested. I then sent samples to several pest control companies after which I started getting some responses. In the meantime I had built a web site and posted my product on the Internet. I started getting orders from housewives who were tired of hearing the mice scratching in the attic at night. This was very encouraging and even more encouraging was the fact that I had received responses from some of the pest control companies who began ordering KritterCaps®.

I knew I had a good product but I only had one size and it only would fit 3" corner posts. I started getting requests for 3.5" and 4" corner posts of which I could not make. It took me a year to come up with the idea and design a combination insert that would fit the 3", 3.5" and 4" corner posts. I had a prototype made on one of the first 3-D CAD printing machines in the area. This eliminated the costs of reworking the mold which was a problem on the first go around of the 3" corner insert. The 3-D sample gave me a working prototype and I immediately knew what changes I needed to make in order to make a good product. My patent was approved with the changes and I went to work.

I had a web design company redesign my website and included the combination corner insert. I immediately began receiving orders that required a 3.5" and 4" corner insert. The combination SCI - 354 corner insert has become a very good reliable product. It is shipped individually, in bulk or in packages of six and it is ready to fit into a 4" corner post. By breaking off one leg on

3 Ways a Home Inspector Can Eliminate Anxiety and Sleepless Nights
As a professional home inspector who cares about your craft, the anxiety center in your brain likely never turns off. It causes you to sit up or pace the halls at 2 a.m. unable to sleep and left wondering if you missed a leaky pipe or something else critical during a home inspection the preceding day.

A client, who is all too interested in whether you are insured, is likely to trigger this anxiety center. And this client isn’t an anomaly, but rather the type A client you see and hear from time and time again.

How can you reduce this anxiety and work without worry? Follow a few simple cardinal rules I outline in this week’s ClaimsAcademy video blog.

ENDCAPS™ corner insert is designed to stay put when properly installed in the corner post. It is environmentally friendly and requires no screws or caulk to hold it in place.

In the next articles I will describe some of the surprises I had which involved critters other than mice and how the ridge vent EndCaps™ came about.

If you plan on exhibiting at InspectionWorld 2016 each side and one base section on each side it will fit the 3.5" corner post. By breaking off two legs and two base sections on each side it will fit the 3" corner post. The SCI 354 corner insert is designed to stay put when properly installed in the corner post. It is environmentally friendly and requires no screws or caulk to hold it in place.

This is your chance to get noticed at North America’s largest home inspection conference.

Don't make the mistake of thinking your direct mail envelope is “just an envelope”. In direct mail, the mighty envelope is multi-facted. It is a billboard, a store front, a response generator, the first impression someone has of your business.. It can make your mail (and response rates) sizzle.

Studies show that your mail has 3 seconds to stand out from the rest. You need to be able to understand the strategies that help convince the recipient to open the envelope and learn more about your offer, your information, or to take action. The first trick is to keep the envelope (and your message) out of the trash. How? By optimizing the 3-second rule.

Here are 6 strategies to optimize the 6-second rule:

• Know your audience. Understand what motivates the recipient. Know what other mail they are flipping through - bills, letters, postcards, self-mailers. What motivates the monthly print publication

• First Thing: our monthly e-newsletter
• ashi.org: Banner ads on our website
• InspectionWorld: exhibit and sponsor or just sponsor or just exhibit - but the only way to Get Noticed is to be visible.

recipient to move your mail from the trash pile to the open pile?

• Stand out. Size, shape, color and paper texture make a difference in setting your mail apart from its competition.
• Captivate the Curious. Use an intriguing teaser or question to pull your reader inside the envelope, to find out more about your message.
• Invite Action. Involvement devices invite your reader to take action. Zip strips, pull-reveals and post-it notes are a few involvement devices that require the recipient to spend more time with your mail.
• Energize your Message. The use of print-to-mobile, QR and AR codes, can make your message come alive. Use it on your envelope for a preview of what's inside.
• Ask an Expert. Check with local marketing companies or free-lancers to help you maximize the 3-second rule and make your mail and response rate sizzle.
